Pilot Holds New York Hostage¹

The first word of 1 came at 10.20 a.m. when a police department official telephoned the United Nations and informed the Secretary General that a lunatic pilot in the area planned 2 his plane into the UN building.

The UN was evacuated, fire teams moved into the UN rounds to cope with the disaster.

Then the police corrected their 3 report. The target if the pilot, Richard Boudin, was not the UN, but the publishing company, housed in a building two blocks from the UN.

Mr. Boudin apparently felt that his novel, “Confessions of a Counterfeiter”, was not getting enough publicity, 4 he chartered the plane at a New Jersey airport and radioed that he was going to destroy the publishing house.

Soon 5 the president of the publishing company agreed to talk with Mr. Boudin, if he would land at La Guardian Airport. Mr. Boudin accepted and flew off, the crisis over. Police said Mr. Boudin would be charged with endangerment and other offences

When a Computer Error Is a Fatal Mistake

Life without computers has become _1_. They are designed to look after so many boring but essential things that we have become dependent on them. But _2_ the demands placed on computers grow, so does the number of incidents involving computer errors. It is only a matter of time before a computer-made catastrophe occurs. As early as 1889, a word entered the language that was to become all too familiar to computer scientists: a “bug”, meaning a mistake. For decades bugs and “debugging” were taken to be part of every computer engineer’s _3_.

Of course, more often than not errors are _4_ annoying, but sometimes they can come close to causing tragedies. On the Picadilly line in London’s Underground a driver who was going south along a track got confused while moving his empty train through a cross-over point. He started to head north straight at a south bound train full of people. The computerized signalling system _5_ to warn him of impending disaster and it was only his quick human reactions that prevented a crash.

Lightning Strike

It is not surprising that people in the past were afraid of lightning. We still find lightning thrilling and fascinating. Scientists are trying to predict storms and protect people _1_ lightning strikes.

Things used to be much _2_. According to research by Dr. Derek Elsom the number of fatalities has dropped by 80 per cent since the mid-1850s. This isn't because lightning is less _3_, but because fewer people now work in the open air. The experience of Roy Sullivan goes to show how dangerous it can be to work _4_.

Roy, a former park ranger in Virginia, USA, held the world record for being struck by lightning. He was first hit in 1942, losing just the nail from his big toe! He was struck again in 1969, 1970 and 1973. In 1976 a strike hurt his ankle and in 1977 he suffered chest and stomach burns. After _5_ all this he killed himself in 1983!
